

Giving Worth to God

Have you ever left the church on Sunday morning feeling disappointed? Did you leave thinking, “I didn’t get anything from worship today,”?

If so, it may be because you were focused on the wrong thing. Worship is not about you getting something from God, but rather worship is about God getting something from you. To say, “I didn’t get anything from worship,” is like complaining, “I went to my friend’s birthday party, and he didn’t give me a present.”

The word worship means, “giving worth to someone or something.” When we worship, either together or alone, it is to give worth to God by praising Him, thanking Him, and recommitting our lives to Him. In this way we express how much we value Him, thus giving Him worth.

Sometimes God speaks to us when we come to Him in worship. As I prepare to preach from the Bible, I hope and pray that God speaks to you. But worship is primarily about us speaking to God. If we miss that, we’ve missed the main point.

So when you come together with other Christians on Sunday, come to give to God.
